

LOVE IS NOTHING.

Love Comes From Everything Long Lasting.

FVMMD

HEXADIGITALL ACADEMY

PUBLISHING STANDARDS

Technical blueprint parameters for Amazon KDP distribution:

- Trim Size: Standard 6" x 9" (152.4mm x 228.6mm) industry book layout for optimal reader handling and print aesthetics on Amazon.
- Margins: Custom configured 18mm side margins with a 20mm top/bottom safety boundary to guarantee beautiful text layout without gutter clipping.
- Typography: Classic 11pt New Roman body face set at 1.5 line spacing for an intimate, seamless reading rhythm.
- Tone Alignment: Plain, open, personal, conversational prose designed to feel like an unhurried, late-night porch chat between two close friends.

THE MAP OF THIS BOOK

How we are going to walk through this together

Let's Talk Truth: Chasing a Lie	1
 Part 1: The Things That Don't Burn
Chapter 1: Looking Past the Spark
Chapter 2: No Secrets, No Shadows
Chapter 3: Finding Our Rhythm Everyday
 Part 2: Stacking the Blocks
Chapter 4: The Small, Boring Everyday Things
Chapter 5: How the Little Things Grow Heavy
Chapter 6: Fixing the Peeling Layers Together
 Part 3: Keeping the House Standing
Chapter 7: Pausing to Check on Us
Chapter 8: Fixing the Cracks Early
Chapter 9: Growing Up Without Growing Apart

LET'S TALK TRUTH

CHASING A LIE

If we are going to sit down and be completely honest with each other, we have to start by throwing away a massive lie we've all been handed. From the stories we read to the movies we watch, we are told that love is a foundation. We're told that if you just love someone enough, that feeling will be the bedrock. It's supposed to be this unshakeable ground that will effortlessly carry the weight of bills, hard days, changing moods, and the slow grind of the years.

But let's be real for a second. If love was actually a bedrock, why do so many relationships shatter when life gets heavy? If love was a magical shield, why does a home built on nothing but pure romance turn to ash the very first time a real crisis sparks? Every single day, people who love each other deeply walk away because their house fell down around them.

The truth is simple, grounded, and it changes everything:

| Love is nothing. Love comes from everything long lasting.

Think about it. Just as a word or a quick rush of emotion, love on its own has no real weight. It can't patch a roof in a storm, it won't force someone to respect you when they're angry, and it doesn't automatically heal a broken heart. It's an empty cup. Love isn't the heavy brick you start with. It's the mortar that settles, cures, and holds things tight only after you and I have carefully picked the right materials, laid them down, and looked after them every single day.

Instead of chasing a feeling and hoping it saves us, I want us to turn the whole thing upside down. Let's stop obsessing over the emotion and start focusing on the actual build. A truly successful, long-lasting relationship isn't held together by a wild, emotional high. It's built intentionally, step by step, using materials that simply refuse to burn.

When you focus entirely on building a safe, honest, functional, and steady world with someone else, something beautiful happens. A natural warmth starts to fill the rooms you've built together. That deep, quiet sense of safety and total connection is what love actually is. You didn't create the warmth directly. You just built a house sturdy enough to keep it warm forever.